

Reflections on PSI Ethics, or
How I Learned to Stop Worrying and Love the Code of Conduct

Training Development Day on Ethics and the Code of Conduct
Friday, 8 November 2013 from 09:30 to 16:00

Moorgate, London Metropolitan University, London E1 7QA

Follow us on Twitter: #PSITNGethicsCPD

CPD event sponsored by The Public Service Interpreting and Translation Network Group, The National Register of Public Service Interpreters and London Metropolitan University

This interactive and consciousness raising event is aimed at PSI interpreters and interpreting students. The day will cover both the principles of professional ethics and practical applications of the Code of Conduct for Public Service Interpreters.

Entitled 'Reflections on PSI ethics, or How I Learned to Stop Worrying and Love the Code of Conduct', the day will include presentations on interpreting ethics from Interpreting Masters' graduates of the Metropolitan University, breakout workshops for small group discussions on specific issues, practical lessons from the NRPSI professional Code of Conduct and real-life implementations of codes of conduct from the police and health sectors.

The aim is to give NRPSI Registrants a boost in the current trying working conditions by providing a low cost professional development on the wider subject of professional ethics as well as practical application of the Code of Conduct.

Registration for the day is only £20.00 and must be completed by 1st November. There are limited places, so early registration is recommended, via the Eventbrite website:

<https://ethicsforpublicserviceinterpreters.eventbrite.co.uk/>

Certificates of attendance will be available for attendees at the conclusion of the event. Note that lunch is not provided, but attendees can use the reasonably priced canteen on site and there are many nearby sandwich bars.

A more detailed programme will follow shortly.